Using these two tools together you see not only what was happening when but also where in relationship to the nations of today.

Turning views (layers) on and off

Some versions of the Adobe Reader have a button named “layer” while others use this symbol.

Click on the layer symbol or to show the list of map layers.

Now you can turn each layer on or off. by clicking in the box next to the layer name. The box is blank when the layer is off and has the symbol of an eye when it is on.
For example this next image shows the base map of today’s nations turned on along with the 1850 BC Abraham layer and all other layers are off.

From this you easily see that the Hittites and the ancient city of Haran were in modern day Turkey. You also see that the Amorites controlled parts of today’s nations of Iraq, Turkey, Syria, Lebanon, Israel and Jordan.

Printing

You can print whatever version of the map layers you have on your screen at any time.

Print by clicking on the print symbol

Or by choosing File and then Print from the top menu bar.

This version of Maps of the Holy Land prints is optimized to print on 8.5 x 11 paper.

Suggestion: To get a set of maps to use when you are not at the computer, print only the base map on standard printer paper. Then turn on one layer at a time while turning off all the others. Print each of these layers on transparency paper. (You can purchase transparency paper that works with either ink jet or laser printers at your local office supply store or online. Be sure to buy the transparency paper for your category of printer.)
